Chained in a Dark Ship Pen. THE SUFFERINGS OF A MATE ON THE NORTH ERN LIGHT ACCUSED OF MUTINY.

Captain Joshua Slocumb, of the ship Northern Light, obtained a warrant from United States Commissioner Shields Thurs-day afternoon for the arrest of Henry Arthur Slater, one of his crew, who, he said, was mutinous. Deputy United States Marshal Charles Bible served the warrant. When he boarded the vessel, which was lying at Pierrepont Stores, Brooklyn, Chief-Mate Mitchell asked the Marshal if he was alone. He said that Slater was a dangerous man, and it would "take several powerful men to hold him." Slater was confined in a pen about five feet by four, and as dark as a dungeon. As the Marshal peered into the darkness Slater eried out, "Are you the officer come to arrest me?" The Martheon when Brahman were produced by the same the Brahman were produced by the Brahman were the darkness Slater cried out, "Are you the officer come to arrest me?" The Marshal said he was. "Thank God," said the prisoner fervently. The miserable man was lying on his back, with one foot hoisted into the air and strapped to the ceiling. Attached to the ankle of his other leg was a heavy iron manacle, to which was fastened an enormous chain weighing about eighty pounds. His only clothing was an undershirt and a sock which covered the foot which was raised in the air. The unfortunate man had been the holy men, and the cow and then the holy men, and the cow and the Brahman were produced by the same act of creative power. So Brahmanism and the cow are inseparable, and then the holy men, and the cow and the Brahman were produced by the same act of creative power. The unfortunate man had been confined in his pen for fifty-three days, and had torn off his clothing while the ship was crossing the equator, when the heat in his had torn off his clothing while the ship was crossing the equator, when the heat in his pen must have been 140° at least. The carpenter filed the rivets from his manacles, and he was released. When he was taken on deck he was unable to stand while be was being dressed. The Marshal offered brandy to the prisoner. He declined, say-ing that he never drank liquor, and after drinking a few swallows of water he told

So, too, in Egypt once a year the sacred animals become, by drinking a few swallows of water he told the Marshal he was ready to go. The Marshal was compelled to support his prisoner and to move slowly from the vessel to the Wall-Street ferry, which was only about 250 yards distant. Slater was so weak that he panted violently and was compelled to sit down on the curbstone to gest several times on the way to the ferry. On reaching the city the marshal and his On reaching the city the marshal and his prisoner took a horse-car to the Ludlow-Street jail, consuming nearly three hours in the journey. Deputy-Warden Klernan prepared a chop for Slater. He swallowed a few mouthfuls, but was unable to retain substantial food, and a physician was summoned, who prescribed the proper nourishment. After the prisoner was placed in hed he become foverish and rayed in de-Holy city, the camel of Islam receives but scant respect from a provoked rider or short-tempered owner. So, too, the furry obliquities of Egyptian adoration relapsed in the majority of cases and for the greater part of the year into their proper places in the animal world. But the glory of the cow of Hindostan, like that of its prototype in Vedic legends, is never in colling. It is always at the providing. In in bed he became feverish and raved in delirium the greater part of the night.

Although he was still very weak, Sla-ter had an interview with his counsel. James P. Davenport. He said that while the ship was lying at Port Elizabeth, in South Africa. on September 26th, he heard a second mate was wanted, and he applied a second mate was wanted, and he applied for and obtained the position. He thought the Captain did not like him for some reason, and he heard him say: "I'll fix that fellow when we get outside." One day, when the vessel was about eleven days out, the Captain gave Slater an order, which he says the did not hear. The Captain called him down, and then struck him on the head with something which caused the blood to flow and impaired his eyesight. Slater remonstrated, and the Captain told him to take his things from the cabin and go forward to the forecastle with the men, as he could no longer remain with the officers. Four days afterward Slater was late in making his appearance. The Captain said he would put him in irons. Slater ran forward and hid himself among the freight. The Captain fired two shots at him ran. Shortly afterward the chief mate and several men, armed with cutlasses and pistols, captured him and placed him in irons. His bands were shackled behind him and his feet were manacled. Slater managed to make his escape, and then he went to the room where the mates were sleeping. Pointing his pipe, which resembled a pistol, at them, he directed them to throw up their hands. They did so, and he searched for their pistols, but was unable to find them. He says the intended to throw the pistols overboard. The Captain again had Slater put in irons and chained to the deck. For several days Slater's diet was a single cracker and water. Then the rations were doubled. One day he was lonely and attempted to sing a hymn. For this he was "triced"—that is, his feet were strapped to the ceiling several hours each day. On Wednesday last some one emp-tied a bottle of carbolic acid over him, burning him, and causing him much pain. He says he is twenty-six years old, weighed 185 pounds, and was very powerful when he shipped on the Northern Light. He is now very much emaciated, and weighs only about 135 pounds. He had a medal which he won in an exhibition of Caledonian games at Fort Elizabeth before

Captain Slocumb, when questioned in reference to Slater's statements, said he did not see how Slater could be sick. He thought "he must be shamming." He said he had had a good deal of trouble, from first to last, with his crew, and that Slater was responsible for much of it. One of the subordinate officers of the Northern Light said that Slater acid very badly her. pect an insult or avenge one. The Mohammedan drover, therefore, if in a particularly wilful humor, will sometimes so manage it that his restive charge escapes, and that, being carefully hunted by him in the direction of the Hindoo bazaars, some popular temple, or bathing-ghat, it shall parade its misfortunes and proclaim the fate which awaits it to as many Hindoos as possible. Every chance he gets of striking it with his "lathe" is nimbly scized, and when the animal is not within reach of staff or stone he vociferously assails it with abuse; for he knows that many who see him strike the cow would willingly submit themselves to the blow if the beast could escape it, and that every insult he throws at the runaway animal resolution. of the subordinate officers of the Northern Light said that Slater acted very badly be-fore he was placed in irons. He then con-ducted himself so badly that the captain was obliged to have him chained as well as handcuffed. He broke several pairs of handcuffe. Captain Slocumb preserved these irons, and will produce them at the examination. An examination into the case will be had this morning.

THE HINDOO COW.

No animal in all the range of zoölstry has ever arrived at such dignities as the Hindoo cow. The monkey is sufficiently sacred, and it goes hard with the novice who, unconscious of his sacrilege, shoots the village peacocks. In other countries, as in the case of the dog and baboon, bull and ram, crocodile, hawk, and ibis of ancient Egypt, or the eagle and crow, snake, wolf, shark, and pike of the modern clan-animal worship, many birds and beasts, reptiles and fishes, have attracted to themselves the homage of nations. But, to themselves the homage of nations. But, putting them all together, whether in fur, feather, or scales, they do not collectively outweigh the stupendous sanctity with which Brahmanism has invested the cow. The bull shares in some degree its part-ner's honors, and in the more exclusively Hindoo towns sacred cattle of both sexes lounge about the streets. No place is for-bidden to them, and they are free of every stall. Wherever they choose to feed, there they are at hierty to eat, and wherever they choose to lie down, that place is theirs. The

Hand-Organ Romances GRINDER WHO MADE A FORTUNE-AN INDEX OF TASTE-THE FRENCH GIRL. [From the New York Tribune.]

The organ-builder, with coat and waist-

The cow and not the bull, however, is preeminently the object of worship. The latter may be specially sacred as the "vehicle" of this god or a particular symbol of that, but the tetic musicians. "I believe I am the only hand-organ man-ufacturer in this country," said the build-er, as he lit his little black pipe and blowed a cloud of smoke from his lips. "I have been here on this corner for twenty-seven years. A long time to stick to one place, isn't it? But our business isn't what it used to be." And the organ-builder shook his head as the profits of former years arose before his mind. "Our trade is fast going god or a particular symbol of that, but the former pervades the whole religion, and it-self adds a sanctity to every deity in the Pautheon. When Brahma, the all-father, to the dogs. The demand for street hand-organs has fallen off 30 or 40 per cent. within ten or fifteen years. People have got sick and tired of the music, and offer no excuse for kicking the Italian grinder into the middle of the street when he becomes too demonstrative See how things have changed since I first began to make organs. For many year Italian emigrants monopolized the organ-grinding business. When the war closed disabled soldiers became their rivals and beat them on their own ground. Now there are all sorts of men and women en-gaged in lugging or dragging organs about the streets. It is noticeable, too, that the Italians do not make as much money as they did years ago. People do not now throw dollar-bills around loosely as they did in flush days. A hand-organ was then a wonder worth seeing and hearing; now mere act of eating "ghee"-c.aritied buta fellow wouldn't go around the corner to ter-condones many sins, while the con-sumption of "the five products" of the cow cleanses from all pollution. The camel selected to carry the Sultan's annual gift look at the instrument, much less to hear it."

"Do you know of any street organists who have succeeded in making fortunes in the business?" asked the reporter.

"Yes, several," replied the builder. " remember one in particular. He started off in the spring, with his organ, and did not return till late in the winter. During this time he bad travelled as far west as the Mississippi river and north-ward to Quebec. On that trip alone he made $2,500. He was badly frost-bitten while in Canada, and swore on that account that he would never go into tha blasted region again, and he didn't. He took the money he had made for several years and invested it 'n hand-organs; he opened a store and sold his instruments at a good margin. In a few years he had amassed a large fortune.

"Hand-organs, the street variety," of Hand-organs, the street variety, continued the builder, "cost all the way from $25 to $125. Concert organs, such as are used in drinking-shops, halls, and travelling shows, bring all the way from $2,500 to $25,000. Some of these are as complete in the number of instruments they represent as a preference of a full load. Then sent as an orchestra or a full band. They contain piccolos, flutes, clarinets, cornets, baritones, bases, triangles, drums, and cymbals."

Though all the herds that other peoples worshipped have gone from the earth with the credulities upon which they pastured, the bull of Shiva and the cow of Brahma have still their altars in a thousand temples, and arthe various sections of the world. The HUNDRED CORDS OF OAK AND PINE hand-organs which we send to New Engiand are furnished with a fair number of Moody and Sankey bymns, a waltz or two. and a few popular airs. The South pre-fers dance music, such as reels, jigs, waltzes, and polkas. The Central States and the West want airs from Pinafore, Parogate the central dignity in a religion which has two hundred millions of believers. To this day Hindoos devoutly be-lieve in Kamadhuk, the "Cow of Plenty," which yields in Heaven, from her exubetience, Mascotte, and other light operas. Lively songs which have made a hit at the Lively songs which have made a hit at the theatres here in New York are also in demand. Among the latest of these are 'Peck-a-Boo,' 'Sweet Violets,' 'Wait Till the Clouds Roll By,' and musical sketches from 'Mc-Sorley's Inflation,' and 'Muddy Day,' Emmet's songs are also popular. Spaniards and Mexicans take special delicht in fandaugues migute and signific rant udders, every gift and blessing which the spirits of the dead can demand. In deference to the extraordinary sanc-tity of the animal, it is an order of Government that beef should only be prepared for the market, for European and native alike, at certain specified spots, as far as possible from every risk of offending Hindoos, and selected very often by the Hindoos them-selves as the least objectionable place for the abominable act. The driving of cattle to slaughter-yards is the same way protect-ed by regulations, so that the worshippers of the horned things shall not be distressed by seeing the objects of their reverness. light in faudaugoes, minuets, and similar music, so the organs which we send to them are furnished entirely with such pieces. The song 'Home, Sweet Home' is a layorite in New England. Airs from is a favorite in New England. Airs from the old Italian operas, which used to be so popular on the streets years ago, are not in demand now. Their day has passed. Writers of music must compose to suit the popular ear if they expect to achieve suc-cess. I have found that out from expeby seeing the objects of their reverence subjected to a drover's rough treatment subjected to a drover's rough treatment or hearing them insulted by his abusive language. Soon you will hear husbear, man because the street. will hear business-men humming it over on their way down town. Music-publishers, who are always waiting for a 'hit,' issue it by the thousand copies, and in a short time it has become popular enough to warrant me in putting it into a handorgan. Some of these pieces have a short life; others are always acceptable to the public. public.
